Lifting your cargo roof box off of the ground and hoisting it into the air may be a great way to keep your box in good condition and to prevent it from becoming damaged, but it can be difficult to do due to the size and weight of cargo boxes. Rather than struggling with your box every time you need to get it up or lower it down, when you use a great garage hoist, then you can easily keep your box safe and out of the way. This hoist system is perfect for anyone who has a box that may be slightly different in shape or size, as it can easily adjust to most any box without any problems. This means that you can easily fit it to your box without getting frustrated.

Not only will it easily fit your box, but it has a safe rope locking mechanism that is designed to prevent the box from accidentally falling. Not only can this be damaging to the box and cause a lot of problems, but it can also injure anyone who happens to be walking under the box at that time. With 2 8" straps, all of the installation hardware that you need to connect your new hoist system to your ceiling, and coated hooks that are made from solid steel, you never have to worry about the safety of your cargo roof box when you opt for this storage choice.

Not only can users easily raise the box thanks to the powerful and professional pulley system, but this system also makes it easy to lower the box without any fear of it falling. This makes it a great option for anyone who is going to be taking care of their box on their own and won't have help from another adult. Because it can be used by one person by themselves, this is one of the most popular options for roof cargo box storage.

With a 50' hoist role and 2 94" saddle straps, it's easy to fit the straps around the cargo roof box, make sure that they are snug, and then slowly raise the box to the ceiling of the garage. Thanks to the high 120 pound capacity, you can easily store any roof cargo box, as most do not come near that weight limit. This means that you can even keep smaller items inside of the box when it is in storage. While it's not a great idea to store heavy or dangerous items, keeping towels or rags inside that you use for wrapping and cushioning items on your trip is a great idea and will ensure that you have them on hand when it's time to load up your box for your next vacation.

Homeowners who are looking to make hoisting their roof cargo box up to the ceiling in their garage even easier will appreciate that this option is motorized, which means that it does all of the hard work for you. While it comes in incredibly large hoist options that can easily hold up to 2200 pounds without any problem, a smaller hoist that can handle 200 pounds is going to be more than enough for most people. It not only lifts your cargo roof box all the way to the ceiling without any problems, but does so quickly, as it can operate at 26 ft per minute.

It's perfect for lifting any irregular shaped items, which is why it's such a great option to lift and to store a cargo roof box. While some slimmer roof boxes will easily fit on other hoists or lifts, this one is designed to handle larger or bulkier options that may be otherwise difficult to store. Because it runs on a motor, users never have to worry about whether or not they have the strength to operate the pulleys and raise their box. This makes it a wonderful option for anyone who may otherwise struggle to store their roof cargo box and allows homeowners to put the box away by themselves, no matter how much it weighs. Of course, installing this option can be a little more difficult, but it is incredibly versatile, making it a great choice for any garage.

Another powerful lift option that allows homeowners to stand back and allow a machine to do the work for them is the Versa-Lift. This is a perfect option for any homeowner who wants to store more than just their roof cargo box up and off of the floor. Because it has ample space for storing other items, it's ideal for a packed garage. One thing that users love about this lift is that it doesn't rely on hoists to hold and support the roof cargo box. Instead, it has a flat surface that all items can easily rest on, which means that they are evenly supported when being raised to the ceiling.

It's important to make sure that there is enough head room in a garage to use this lift, as it does hang down a little more from the ceiling when compared to other lifts, but the extra storage space that it provides makes it a wonderful option for a lot of people. Additionally, because it can be operated with the touch of a button, it's easy for any user. It can be lowered down to the floor, making loading the lift easier than ever and preventing users from straining their back.

This means that all travel items can easily be stored together, which makes getting ready for an upcoming trip faster and easier than ever before.

Since it is firmly attached to the ceiling, users will generally have to have a little help passing their roof cargo box and other items up for storage. However, it doesn't have any moving parts, and this gives a lot of users peace of mind that they won't run into any problems with their storage falling or failing them when they are trying to access it. Once installed correctly, this rack will stay in place for decades without any problems, making it an obvious answer to homeowners who need storage, but may not have a lot of space for a movable hoist that will require more room to operate. Because it can easily support up to 450 lbs, there aren't any concerns of the roof cargo box falling or being damaged.
